discord in our rank; whare, aspecially in a orisin like the prehent, all should be union and concord.

Such results would be deplorable, and I am sure that none would regret them more than those generous friends—tried and true Republicans every one—who have thus expressed a wish that I should become a candidate for relection. The success of the principles of the Republican party is of far higher importance, than the personal exalistion of any man or number of men. In comparison therewith neither Mr. Arnold nor myself are of any worth; and I am convinced that to be successful, we must be united and harmonious.

I have said this much not only in justice to myself, and to explain my position, but take in justice to a very large number of Republicans for the Republicans of the Republicans for the Re strength of the representations of the Saccasion National Committee at this point. Governor Bigler was quite sure that Cartin would be defeated, and Governor Slavens, chairman of the sforesaid committee, who was comfortably quariered in Philadelphis previous to the election, telegraphed joyful tidings to his friends in advance, of the result.

Among those who are supposed to have lost money on the Pennsylvania election are some very closify attached to the person of the President. I understand that one gratieman who has busined himself in denouncing independent Democrats, has paid several cool thousands for his confidence in the weakness of the independent men in the Democratic organization.

There was the Duke of Newcastle, who smiled sometimes, but heard the plaintive notes of little Patti with the entitudization of calculating machine, and whose kid gloves were never solied by pleibin efforts at applause. The Earl St. Germain was pointed out to us, a patriarch with bald head and a coronet of gray streds or locks. At a distance the enchantment was very great; many persons took the Earl for our venerable President, formerly of Wheatland, Lord Long and between the Earl and the Prices. mere Imitations, of which pur-

The Prince was loudly applanded as he made his entry. He had been seated but a moment when the curtin ascended, and Patti and Aguera Natall, with Formes and Brignoil, came lorward with the chorus and sang "God Save the Queen." To us, however, as a novice, the scene was beautiful: the chorus of villagers in unique costumes; the sudent intil of Patir's shrill sopranc; the deep bass of Formes; the splendid scene of glistening in the background, and the loud peal of the chorus, fell upon the ear and ere like the sudden awa for Nisgars.

The appearance of the audience cannot be pictured. Womanly beauty and manly grace gthered beneath the great chandelser, which glistened and sparkled under the flash of its hundreds of jets. The encircing galieries were densely crowded; the costumes were of the rehest and most varied styles. The scene reminded us of that in the Fompeisa amphithearte, where Arbaces gazed at the provess of Lydor, and the majesty and beauty of the Roman sat down in the circles. The isdues in stiendance had occupied the better portuon of the week in deviaing dresses for the occasion: soft eyes looxed love to eyes that spoke again; the savin and jawels soarkled like the pendants of the fets; while arms in all stages of curve, whiteness, and fullness, were draped over voluptions forms; opera-glasses glissenec; one half sechanic to put them up.

Conclusion of Theckeray's Portrait of King George's household was a model of an English gentleman's household. It was early; it was kindly; it was charitable; it was orderly; it must have seen supplet to a degree which I shudder now to consemplate. No wonder all the princes ran away from the lap of this drary connecte virtue. It always goes, rode, dined at stated intervals. Day after day was the same. At the same hour all nights the King kined his daughts's joffy checke; the princesses kined their mother's hand; and Madame Theilse brought the royal nighteap. At the same hour the quaries and women in waiting had their little dimer, and cackled over their sea. The King had his bedreywand themselves te death in the anter room or the King and his family walked on Windson alopes, the King holding his darling little princess Amelia by the hand; and the Etor boys thrust their chubby checks under the crowd's elbows; and the concert over, the King never failed to take his snormous cocked ha off, and salute his band and say, "Thank you gentlemen."

A quiever household, a more pressic life that this of Kew or Windsor, cannot be Imagined Rair or ahine, the King rode every day fe hours; poked his red face into hundreds of coft ages round about, and showed that shovel his and Windsor uniform to farmers, to pigboys, to diver one making apple dumplings; to a corts of people, gentle and simple, about who countless stories are tool. Nothing can be mei undignified than these atories. When Harow Alraschid visits a vulpied incog,, the latter auts to be vary much the better for the caliph magnificence. Old George shewden on such roy spiender. He need to give a guinea sometimes magnificence. Old George showed no such ro splendor. He mad to give a guines sometime sometimes feel in his pockets and find he had money; often ask a man a bundred question about the aumber of his family, about has o and beans, about the rent he paid for his hom and ride on. On one occusion he played the p of King Affred, and turned a piece of mast w a string at a cottager; house. When the roman came heme, she found a paper with neclosure of money, and a note written by to yal pend! " Fire gainese te buy a jack." was not ploudid, but it was kind and worthy farmer George.
